Introduction

The Legislature sent 1,172 bills to Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger in 2006, and he signed 910 of them into law—including measures that will reduce greenhouse-gas emissions, increase penalties for sex offenders, raise the minimum wage, and even punish those who endanger their pets. Most of these laws go into effect on January 1, 2007.

The governor rejected 22.35 percent of the bills—the fifth highest percentage of vetoes by a California governor in a single year since such comparisons began in 1967 (former Governor Gray Davis holds the highest single-year veto percentage of 24.91 percent in 2000).

2006 Legislative Highlights, prepared by the Senate Office of Research, briefly summarizes 220 significant measures approved by the Senate and Assembly and sent to the governor this year. The bills are organized by policy committee; if a bill was referred to multiple committees, you'll find it listed under the committee of primary jurisdiction. For a listing of bills sorted by bill number, turn to the index.
